

Mae Carol Jemison is an American Physician and a former NASA astronaut. She became the first African American woman to travel in space when she went into orbit aboard the Space Shuttle Endeavour on September 12, 1992. In 1993 Jemison started her own company, the Jemison Group that researches, markets, and develops science and technology for daily life. Jemison continues to advocate strongly in favor of science education and getting minority students interested in science.
